Summary of Information

Site involves a tall, wide, massive structure that seems to taper inward. It is off-white or beige in color, is smoothed concrete, with some sort of cornice, fluting or border around the edges. It is very monolithic, solid, massive, dense, and thick.

There is what appears to be a green, red and black flag associated with it. The people connected with it can be found both inside and outside of it. There is something "uniform" about them--not that they're all the same, but they are here together because of many things they have in common. The things in common are what's significant about their involvement--it's what the things they're doing revolve around. They have a certain esprit de corps--almost like they're all "family." [They interact and cooperate well, toward a common objective. The goal seems to be civic-directed--in a sense a service for a larger polity or social group.] There is a sense of professionalism, of belonging to a brotherhood with a set of specific responsibilities and code of ethics that is beyond what the individual requires normally--it's like an elite organization of some kind--separated apart, yet with ties that extend outward to those who do not directly belong--perhaps clients of some sort. There is a sense of government or technical service, AOL/S of "institute."
